

This architectural drawing shows the elevation of a long, single-story building. The roof is covered in a dense pattern of tiles and features two chimneys, one at each end. The facade is composed of several distinct sections: a left corner with a brick chimney and a door, a large central blank area with a faint irregular shape, a section with two windows (one double-hung and one with a diamond pattern), and a right corner with a brick chimney and a door. The drawing is a black and white line art representation.

